Build-A-Fort Date

Dinner and a (Netflix, Hulu, Fandango, etc.) movie in a fort is an easy go-to. Make sure to cushion with lots of blankets and pillows.If you have kiddos the fort is a bonus and they can help you build it. Decide to wait until they're asleep to have your date in your super snuggly atmosphere.

Painting Date

Order a couple of small canvases, paint and brushes, look up "painting with a twist at home" or "sip and paint" on YouTube and have a blast painting with your Forever-Boo while sipping your favorite yummy wine or sparkling drink. (fyi-you would need to plan ahead)

Dream Date

Make a cozy, hot drink-coffee, tea, warm cinnamon milk, etc.– and share the dreams you have for your life, career, family/future family, etc. The goal is to only dream big together, not strategize. Ride high on flights-of-fancy for a night.

Double Date Food Experience

Call your best couple-buds and try making a new dish that will push your palate to be brave. There are so many avenues to video chat with your friends, USE THEM! I'm sure everyone will get a kick out of watching the non-cookers cook.

Intimacy Challenge

Make a month of it and do the 28-Day Intimacy Challenge! (It's not like you don't have time.) It will give you something fun to look forward to every night! Even if you have kiddos!

Fancy-Night Date

Dress up, yes be cute IN YOUR HOUSE (wear those heels you never get to wear) and cook a fancy dinner. Now, I know the grocery-world is living a hard knock life right now, so you could always do a hefty charcuterie board by candlelight. The goal of the night is to dote on one another while looking elegant and dashing!

Introvert Date

Sometimes you and your Boo need quiet time, especially when life feels hectic (HELLO QUARANTINE LIFE!). Grab a couple of books or your laptops, sit at your kitchen table, on your back porch or your living room fort (here, here)...IN SILENCE. What makes this fun is looking up and "making eyes" at your significant other and settling into the peace of being with each other.